What's New In GMigrate?

[~~~ sharpshoot Thanks ~~~ sharpshoot Thanks ----- mistat There are a lot of calendar apps that send email alerts when you enter a schedule, or a new day, or a meeting, etc. And a lot of them can sync with your Google Calendar. This is great if you have multiple calendars, and some of them are private and some are public. It may be a lot of work to go through your emails and send a calendar invite to all of the people that need to be notified, but I have found that this app saves me a lot of time. ~~~ sharpshoot Thanks, I think we agree on this. The problem is that the standard web calendar API doesn't have the flexibility to allow for this. I'm not going to change the API to allow for a "public/private" kind of concept - it adds a lot of unnecessary complexity without delivering any real added value. Q: how to use oauth2 for gae app i am creating a webapp in google app engine. I am stucked for oauth2. I have gone through the link Also went through this link The links are giving me steps to generate client ID's and secret IDs. But still it is giving me a result "Sorry, you need to authorize this application to use OAuth 2.0." and it is giving a link in "Google Developers Console". I want to use this for authentication and security. I have to use the app engine i.e. Java, php, nodejs. I know that client id's and secret id's are going to be different for each app. So how will I create the client id's and secret id's of my app. Please help me out with this. A: Steps to use Google APIs for oAuth: 1.) It seems that you already made the following: 1.1) Set your scope (1.2) Set the callback URL (2.) Open the following URL in your browser:
